FOREWORD

Hammers pounding and workmen shouting resound throughout our newly completed building. Soon the hallways fill with excited cries as the first student body of Parkland High School arrives to enroll.

Curious eyes stare at the ultra modern lights, windowless rooms, and adjustable blackboards. Close examination of the sprawling edifice reveals an intricate pattern of hallways, doors, and exit signs.

Besides becoming acquainted with the building, we became acquainted with our classmates. A strong bond between former Gray and Griffith students lays the foundation for the erection of friendships.

As the novelty of the new year fades into routine, we concentrate on the varied curriculum as we begin the process of building our intellect. Our tools consist of suitable new courses and new equipment, such as imprinted math desks and overhead projectors. The pay telephones and drink machine are gathering places around which we construct our social life.

We present the Spectatus, not only as a record of experiences, but as Parkland's symbol of the imaginative and ambitious spirit originated by the student body in the year 1965-66.

Co-Editors: Toni Bledsoe Janet Masencup

Curious students receive handbooks and maps as they eagerly enter their new school ready to encounter a host of new experiences, problems, student-teacher relationships, and environments. Steering Committee members help to distribute booklets.

Pupils build enduring friendships as school bells summon them

As school bells rang this year, over fourteen hundred excited pupils entered the doors of Parkland Senior High School. Since this modern building is air-conditioned, those last sultry days of summer failed to distress students en route to classes. In an attempt to reach destinations in the allotted four minutes, pupils stepped over and around workmen. On the first day, guides armed with maps directed students to various rooms. Before long, construction neared completion; thus, the halls no longer echoed with hammers and drills. Procedures soon became more organized, and teachers, as well as pupils, settled down to a year built on difficult lessons, memorable experiences, new friends, and well-earned fun.

Baffled students search hurriedly for their buses as they return home, bubbling with excitement of their first day at Parkland. State-supported school bus transportation is only one of the variety of new conveniences that students experienced this year. Positions as bus drivers were awarded to several pupils who were responsible and were willing to be trained.

Everyday after school, students such as Fred Brinkley raid the lobby drink machines, a new privilege allotted to them.

Linda Cooper prepares to announce the Art Club's first meeting. Connecting each room separately, the new intercom has a stereo record player and an emergency call-in system.

Kenny Whicker lights a candle as he and Susan Tuttle prepare to present their Macbeth memory lines to their senior English class. Each member of their senior English class was also required to memorize a few lines as a segment of their study of Macbeth.

Marsha Cude, chemistry student, sets up equipment in preparation for a class demonstration dealing with the process of distilling water. Extra projects such as this one enhanced and enriched the students' knowledge and understanding.

Varied curriculum accomplishes task of teaching students about subjects, offering chance to select careers.

Novel equipment, such as math desks that could be written on, enabled teaching and learning to be more enriching this year at Parkland Senior High School. Mustangs studied graphs and charts which were permanently printed on these desks, allowing them to have valuable and useful information at their fingertips. Even though progress brings modern apparatus, classical studies such as Macbeth and its projects remained. English scholars strove to comprehend the works of the old masters, while other pupils memorized and applied technical chemistry formulas. Accuracy and patience were two desirable traits of all science enthusiasts. Diligent Mustangs proved that learning is built basically on study and application.

Gary Burke, Advanced Math II student, finds new desks in mathematics department are helpful in calculating problems and for quick reference to conversion tables and graphs.

Christine Pinch, a member of Our Lady of Mercy Church, kneels before a statue of Mary and reverently prays.

Near the beginning of the school year, visiting day was held for the parents of students. The parents were given an opportunity to meet the teachers, to observe classes, and to view the interior of the school.

Youthful enthusiasm, readiness to conscientious assistance given to # perform various tasks characterize advance community, aid citizens.

Wiley Doby and Judson Davis sort clothes and accessories collected during the Cuban Refugee Drive.

Student Susie Barney cheerfully offers refreshments during "coffee hour", which was planned for parents to become acquainted with one another.

Anxious to serve in the neighborhood as well as in their school, Mustangs willingly contributed their leisure time, ingenious talent, and unending enthusiasm. Parkland students discovered that they could benefit the community in many different ways: by working as Red Cross volunteers, by seeking donations for charity drives, and by collecting food and clothing for needy families. Pupils interested in helping others could join or be inducted into various service organizations such as Key Club, the Anchor Club, Hi-Y, and Y-Teens. Ideas originated in these clubs for worthwhile projects, including anything from caroling at homes for the aged to selling bread for the March of Dimes. As well as service clubs, students joined church-sponsored groups in which they visited the sick, helped the needy, and served others through the church. By giving unselfishly, pupils received a feeling of self-satisfaction as grateful recipients' faces beamed with happy smiles denoting appreciation.

Bill Knouse, D.E. student, installs new license plate on a teacher's car as part of the D.E. service project for the faculty.

Sharon Ervin, Red Cross volunteer in the summer, entertains Jamie at Amos Cottage, a center for mentally retarded children.

Celebrating 200th anniversary, Parkland students recall city's history.

As a school expands its foundations of knowledge, the community also grows, since education is a community tool. This year marks the 200th anniversary of Salem, N. C., the product of which is the booming tobacco capital, Winston-Salem. One used to see evening shadows on clay-shingled roofs and hear hoofs click on cobblestone streets. However, now one gazes upward to see towering buildings and pauses to listen to industrious factory sounds. Citizens advance culturally as well as industrially by attending performances in amphitheaters and by inviting companies to produce operas.

To accommodate the growing needs of the community, Forsyth Memorial Hospital, supplied with modern medical facilities, was constructed in 1961 along the Silas Creek Parkway.

Undergoing restoration to preserve the beauty and authenticity of the old Moravian community, South Hall stands on Salem Square. Built in 1803, it was one of the first buildings used by Salem College.

Towering above the city of Winston-Salem, the new Wachovia Bank building, which serves as a distinctive landmark, represents the industrial development and rapid economic growth of this community.

Athletic competition

unites Parkland in support of team.

With modern and improved gymnasium facilities, Parkland was able to offer varied athletic and physical education programs. Enthusiastic young athletes practiced diligently after school and eagerly participated in gym classes. Some bettered themselves in hopes of being chosen for an athletic team, while others entered into physical exercise just to build stronger bodies. Along with skill and strength, players learned good sportsmanship and studied the technical aspect of sports. Athletic competition also instilled a bond of fellowship among Parklanders.

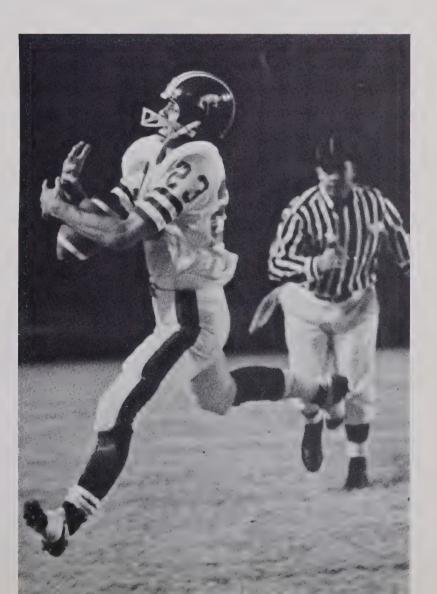

Weary after a strenuous mid-afternoon football practice, Lee Callaway, blocking back, pauses to relax.

As part of their physical education program, the boys use the medicine ball, an aid in developing muscles.

After shaking his defenders, Mike Clary tries to grab a Hamby pass, but at the last minute the ball slips through his arms for an incomplete attempt.

Billy Shaw treasures his National High School Speech Award, presented to him for outstanding ability.

Enthusiastic and industrious students of Parkland Senior High School were rewarded for their extraordinary efforts with many praiseworthy honors and well-deserved awards. A national speech award was presented to a senior Mustang who possessed oratorical ability and the willingness to serve. Other outstanding representatives of Parkland were the two hard-working student teen-page correspondents who gathered campus news for the Winston-Salem Journal and Sentinel.

Joyce Childress and Dick Callaway, semi-finalists in the National Merit Tests, look over requirements for a future exam.

A finalist for the prized Morehead Scholarship, senior Dick Callaway displays his serious literary interests as he enriches his textbook learning with some outside reading.

Awards represent accomplishments of outstanding, industrious pupils.

Talented and ambitious Mustangs were presented honors for their outstanding abilities and exceptional characteristics. Several Parkland students were elected to the North Carolina All-State Band for their musical capabilities. One senior pupil was chosen to participate in the United Nations Pilgrimage held during the summer of 1965. Other Mustangs were elected to one of the Forsyth All-Conference football teams for their athletic performances. Several Parkland pupils won prize ribbons at the Dixie Classic Fair for projects in art, woodworking, and home economics.

Receiving official notification of their election to the 1965 All-Conference football team are varsity team members Gene Shields, Daniel Zimmerman, and Don Hamby, all seniors.

Parkland senior, Sharon Ervin, reminisces while she shows pictures of her trip to New York as one of the Forsyth County representatives to the United Nations Pilgrimage.

Reading an editorial on the Teen Jury are Mike Dickey and Kathy McDuffie, Forsyth Youth Commission representatives.

Anne Cook and Kathy McDuffie, DAR Good Citizens, compare notes for speeches which they plan to deliver before the DAR. Anne and Kathy were selected for this honor on the basis of citizenship, dependability, patriotism, and scholarship.

Students represent Parkland High by acquiring Aycock Cup, D.A.R., P.T.A. Good Citizenship awards.

Interest in politics led Judy Widener to be selected as Girls' State representative at U.N.C.-G. in the summer of 1965.

Shiny loving cups and plaques adorned the display cases in the main lobby of Parkland Senior High School. Tokens of honor and achievement often encouraged students to set high goals and strive to attain them. Honor recipients were not only recognized as being outstanding academically, but also as being possessors of leadership qualities, individuality, distinctive personalities, and praiseworthy ambitions. Leadership ability marked Boys' State and Girls' State delegates, DAR Good Citizens, and Youth Commission members. Governor's School students were recognized as having talent either scholastically or artistically. Winning honors served as part of the foundation built by Parkland students.

Varsity debaters Dick Callaway, Ronnie Weaver, Gaffney Fainter, and Billy Shaw admire the Charles B. Aycock Cup, won in competition by Gray High School's debaters for 1964-1965, with hopes of retaining the award for Parkland High School.

Boys' State delegates, Gene Triplette and Lee Callaway, prepare to leave for the 1965 convention held at Wake Forest.

Mustangs attain trophies, awards for citizenship, talent, leadership.

Pride and admiration swelled throughout Parkland Senior High School as Mustangs were recognized for numerous honors and awards. Debaters proudly displayed the Aycock Cup won at Gray last year and solemnly vowed to give an even more rewarding performance this year. Also proving to be outstanding were the many advanced placement students who reported to Reynolds every morning for accelerated study in various subjects. Several of these pupils, along with other Parkland students, were nominees for the Morehead scholarships. Two Mustangs were National Merit Scholarship semifinalists. Also recognized and honored for their scholastic achievements were sophomore pages and junior marshals who participated in various senior class activities. Many Mustangs built praise-worthy reputations as they were acknowledged for honors and awards achieved this year.

Responding to cheerleaders' cries, pupils show rousing school spirit.

Brightly clad spectators filled the stadium as the Mustanas stampeded onto the field wearing their red, white, and blue uniforms. All preparations made through posters, pep rallies, and booster tags were not in vain, for cheerleaders beamed as fans responded to cheers with enthusiastic school spirit. Majorettes and Dixie Debs expertly performed intricate half-time routines to the peppy tunes of the band, whose performance revealed hours of planning and practicing. Original ideas such as "National Burlap" and miniature footballs also promoted school spirit as the entire student body united to support the Mighty Mustangs in 4-A competition. In its first year, Parkland Senior High School built an excellent reputation based on many victories, good sportsmanship, and outstanding enthusiasm. Every Parkland student could proudly boast, "That's our team!"

excitement overflow as Homecoming activities highlight sports season.

Elated queen, Nancy Caudle, and her escort, Mike Kimel, lead contestants off the field as half-time activities end.

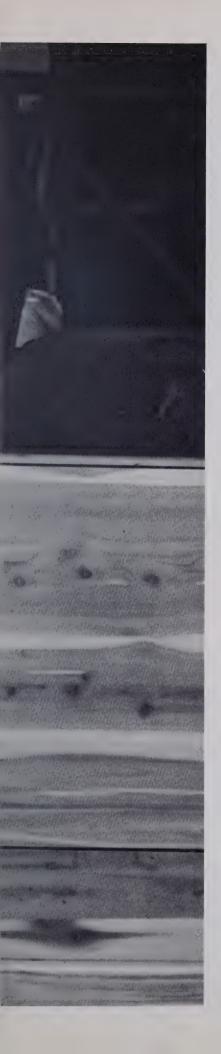

Attired in swishing formals, excited attempted to steady jittery nerves while waiting for their dates. Boys also eagerly anticipated these social happenings as they bought admission tickets, rented tuxedos, provided transportation, and completed last minute arrangements. Occasions such as the Harvest Dance, the Christmas Dance, the Twirp Dance, and the Spring Prom provided an opportunity for social development among all Parkland students. Committee members met to discuss colorful decorations, party-type refreshments, and appropriate entertainment for these upcoming gala events. Mustangs built quite full and oftentimes rushed social lives by planning and attending these parties, dances, and proms.

Crisp, autumn evening air stimulated the atmosphere for the crowning of Parkland Senior High's first Harvest Queen. Since Parkland was in its first year, there were no alumni to return for a homecoming. After a superb performance of the Dixie Debs, majorettes, and band members, a stillness swept over the stadium as Carol Leonard, Miss Winston-Salem, prepared to crown the queen. A nervous feeling of anxiety was felt throughout the stadium as twenty-eight sponsors stood on the field waiting to hear the final decision. Suddenly the loud speaker announced, "The 1965 Harvest Queen is Miss Nancy Caudle!" Amidst tears and smiles of happiness, the court left the field to be greeted by congratulations from excited spectators.

FACULTY AND CURRICULUM

By rendering services, time and guidance, our faculty members have gained our admiration and gratitude. Striving to instill within us a love of learning, our instructors have dedicated themselves to our mental growth. Their unique presentations of classroom studies and their ability to enrich our thoughts have made our period of learning an exciting and worthwhile adventure. Because they display an avid interest in our welfare, we constantly seek the advice of our influential educators. Supporting athletic events, encouraging the formation of clubs and chaperoning social activities, our teachers have contributed to the building of our minds, friendly relationships and school spirit.

Members of the administrative staff are Mr. Ned Smith, associate superintendent; Mr. Marvin Ward, superintendent; Mr. Raymond Sarbaugh, Jr., associate superintendent; (first row). Mr. Leo Morgan, assistant superintendent; Mr. Robert Blevins, assistant superintendent; Mr. Eugene Johnston, assistant superintendent; Mr. C. T. Leinbach, comptroller, (last row).

Working for the betterment of the Winston-Salem/Forsyth County school system, the school board planned a large building program that would last until 1970. In this program the school board authorized the use of 18 million dollars for the construction of school buildings. Several duties of the school board were approving the budget, distributing money, employing personnel, and accepting the plans for any new construction in the system. Directed by Mr. Roy Ray, chairman, the school board served as a policy-making body as well as an organizer of long-range programs.

School board advances education by setting up policies for system, equalizing standards of learning.

Members of the Winston-Salem Forsyth County school board, whose duty is to decide on policies to be used throughout the city, include Mr. Boyd Idol, Mrs. G. G. Young, Dr. Lillian B. Lewis, Mr. Roy Ray, and Mrs. C. G. Grubbs, first row. Mr. Clyde G. Barber, Mr. William M. Knott, Mr. Whit East, Mr. Richard Ervin, and Mr. Carl Russell, last row. The consolidated board also authorizes the construction of new buildings within the district.

P.T.A. achieves purpose of bringing parents, teachers into fellowship.

Mrs. Patricia Reed, math instructor, places applications for the Good Citizenship Award in the teachers' boxes. On these forms instructors will place the name of the student of their choice along with a list of his qualifications.

An open house on October 5 projected the theme of the Parkland P.T.A., "Every Parent a Teacher". At the beginning of the year P.T.A. members sold Parkland jackets and sweatshirts to raise money for a gift to the school. Outstanding students were given a citizenship award each month. The members also sponsored a tree-planting day at Parkland, in which various clubs participated. One P.T.A. meeting consisted of a cultural arts night, which included presentations of the drama and chorus departments and a guest speaker. A parent-teacher musical spiced spring activities.

P.T.A. officers are Mrs. Edgar Hutchins, president; Mrs. J. B. Shepherd, second vice-president; Mrs. C. A. Kimel, secretary; and Mr. Carlos Ervin, first vice-president.

To fulfill the needs of students has been the main objective of Mr. Larry Graham, principal. While our high school was under construction, Mr. Graham spent the spring and summer months in preparation for its completion as he worked conscientiously with the steering committee and met regularly with the coaching and administrative staffs. Parkland's success in its first year is accredited to its principal with his capable leadership ability and cooperative spirit. He has shown his faith in the younger generation by making available an unlimited program of extra-curricular activities. Admiration and esteem are rendered to Mr. Graham for his efforts to build Parkland High School into a superior educational institution.

Principal Larry Graham organizes new school.

Mr. Larry P. Graham, Principal

Mr. Graham's past positions have given him a distinctive background in leadership. He has served as a mathematics teacher, athletic coach, guidance counselor, assistant principal of Gray High School and as principal of Hanes High School, Mr. Graham received his bachelor of arts degree from Catawba College and completed graduate work at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. Although meeting administrative demands consumes most of his hours, Mr. Graham values leisure moments in which he exerts his ingenuity in woodworking, avidly supports sports events and enjoys camping trips with his wife and three children.

Displaying his outstanding organizational ability, Mr. Graham confers with Mrs. Patricia Reed, a faculty member, about landscaping of school grounds.

MR. WAYNE BARE B.S.

Serving as assistant principal this year, Mr. Bare, who gets much pleasure from mathematical puzzles, proves very efficient in his work with the Key Club, bus routes and schedules, and disciplinary problems.

MISS RUTH HOLTON SECRETARY

Miss Holton, secretary to the principal and manager of the office pages, keeps business matters of the school running smoothly by her efficiency and by her interest in the teachers and the students.

MR. DANIEL MOTLEY A.B., M.Ed.

Interest in the younger generation leads Mr. Motley, guidance director, to advise students on choices of colleges and future vocations and to assist with preparatory tests that aid college-bound seniors.

MRS. WILHELMINA WHICKER
DIETITIAN

Planning of daily menus, making food orders, and supervising serving of lunches are just some of the many responsibilities performed by Mrs. Whicker, dietitian, who also enjoys sewing and gardening at home.

Mrs. Virginia H. Mickey merits senior dedication.

Teaching or counseling, Mrs. Virginia Mickey has been an inspiration to all of us for scholastic achievement. Through her thoughtful advice and warm friendship, she has helped us to adjust to a new building and combined student body and faculty. In the classroom her bountiful knowledge and enlivening humor have enriched our minds and motivated us to search for higher goals. Her knowledge and understanding of young people, her wise judgment, and her unfailing kindness have encouraged us to seek her auidance in personal as well as academic problems. To Mrs. Mickey, who has willingly given her time to direct, encourage, and unselfishly serve our class, we, the seniors, proudly dedicate the 1966 Spectatus.

Mrs. Virginia Mickey

Mrs. Mickey received her bachelor of arts degree from Western Carolina College, after which she completed her graduate work at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. In the fall of 1965 she was appointed by Governor Dan Moore to serve on the North Carolina Textbook Commission. As a member it was her responsibility to read and evaluate all recent textbooks to decide which were appropriate for North Carolina schools. This year at Parkland she was in charge of the experimental team teaching United States history class. For pleasure, Mrs. Mickey enjoys sewing, doing needlework, and going camping.

In fulfilling her duty as class sponsor, Mrs. Virginia Mickey carefully measures Tommy Thompson for his cap and gown as he excitedly awaits graduation.

MRS. CARRIE MAY ALLGOOD
A.B., M.A.

Teaching students to communicate in various languages is a duty of Mrs. Allgood, teacher of French II and III, Spanish I and Latin I, who is displaying her family coat-ofarms she made by needlepoint.

STUDENTS

When we entered Parkland as former Griffith and Gray students, the task of building unity in our school lay before us. Though individual in our backgrounds, we soon became united in support of our school and its activities. Mingling together in work and recreation and sharing in the excitement of athletic victories, former Grayhounds and Panthers quickly became proud Mustangs. Presentation of campaign speeches during the Student Council election and the activities involved in Harvest Week aided us in getting better acquainted with one another. Together, we contemplated intricate classroom problems, engaged in advanced studies, and applied our learning to our everyday lives as we ventured deeper into the realms of education. Through tedious hours of study and rewarding moments of fellowship, we grew in knowledge, understanding, and maturity.

Graduation exercises at the Coliseum climaxed a successful year for the first senior class at Parkland. Ordering invitations and calling cards and being measured for their caps and gowns created an exciting atmosphere prior to graduation. As seniors anxiously awaited a letter of acceptance from the college of their choice, they enjoyed parties and activities given in their honor. The Class Ring Dance, a semi-formal affair held in the spring, celebrated the long-awaited arrival of the unique class rings. Early in the year, senior students elected class officers and board members. Selection of senior superlatives honored worthy members of the class. Under the direction of class sponsors, Mrs. Virginia Mickey, Mrs. Lavenia Robinson, and Mrs. Virginia Sams, the senior class chose colors, scarlet and white; flower, red carnation; and motto, "It matters not how long you live, but how". In appreciation for her service as class sponsor, seniors dedicated the 1966 Spectatus to Mrs. Mickey.

Classification as upperclassmen causes rejoicing among juniors.

Proudly realizing that they could be called "upperclassmen," juniors made themselves well known to the rest of the students and faculty. Eligibility into such honor clubs as the National Honor Society, Masque and Gavel, Quill and Scroll, and Thespian Society helped them realize need for perfection in all phases of school activity. Junior marshals, chosen for their scholastic ability, performed such tasks as ushering for graduation, baccalaureate service, and class day. Mrs. Mary Hutchison, sponsor of the class, aided juniors in planning of a class party held in the spring. Possessing qualities of leadership, class officers were elected by secret ballot at the first of the year. Having the opportunity to take the college board and National Merit exams helped strengthen the minds of the juniors and prepared them for senior year and college.

Junior class officers, Treasurer T. Penfield, President P. Fishel, Secretary B. Foltz and Vice-president T. Binkley leave to purchase party decorations and refreshments to be used at the class's upcoming spring dance.

After due anticipation juniors gain candidacy in four honor societies.

Capable and anxious to shoulder new responsibilities, juniors quickly found their place as upperclassmen. Girls participated in varsity cheerleading, boys in varsity sports, and both in service clubs such as the Anchor Club, Key Club, and Hi-Y. As eager rising seniors, the Class of '67 was measured for class rings, challenged by college board examinations, and elected to honorable positions in the student government.

Linda Hensley, a junior U.S. history student, adds the finishing touch to her project on the history of flags, in which she discussed and displayed the flags of our country.

Parkland Times reporter, Roy Ledbetter, interviews Mr. Wayne Bare, assistant principal, to obtain information about the bus drivers' responsibilities. Using this data, Roy writes an article to be published in the school newspaper.

Practicing different facial expressions, Fred Brinkley pauses in front of a mirror before going to his drama class.

By consulting counselors, juniors select various interesting careers.

Realizing the importance of being well-informed, Marilyn Trent and Susan Everhart prepare to discuss current events.

Carol Sink, a junior, pauses for refreshment after a hard school day as she sits down on a crate to enjoy a drink.

Sophomore class officers, John Callaway, president; Bonnie Cook, secretary; Kathy Sink, vice-president; and Dee Ann Linville, treasurer, plan to take the National Educational Development Tests, offered to the sophomore class in May.

Over 500 strong, the sophomores this year experienced double adjustment. Not only were the tenth graders thrilled at the prospect of high school, but along with 900 other students, were enthused about studying in the county's newest educational plant. Eager ninth graders from Philo, Griffith, and Hill junior highs united to help build a strong student spirit. Boys participated in junior varsity and varsity sports, while girls danced with the Dixie Debs or cheered the team as jayvee cheerleaders. Sophomores became eligible for the honor roll and honor clubs. Under the leadership of sponsors, Miss Moselle Stephenson, Mr. Foster Hayes, and Mrs. Martha Walker, the class elected officers and held a class party. The tenth graders marveled at life seen under a microscope and appreciated the necessity of good driving as learned in Driver's Education. As the year faded, such activities as pep rallies, dances, and assemblies became memories for the rising juniors.

ORGANIZATIONS AND ACTIVITIES

Challenging school work is relieved, yet accented, by the presence of a wide variety of extra-curricular activities and honor societies. Designed to assist us in our pursuit of social, mental, and spiritual growth, each organization has proved a worthwhile portion of our school life. Formed whenever the demand for them arose, several clubs chartered at Parkland this year were new to either or both of the feeder schools. Festive activities and dances were sponsored by the Student Organization and Pep Club to boost school spirit and friendly relationships. Through informal gatherings, foreign language scholars enhanced the fluency of their speech and became more familiar with native customs. Numerous hanor societies beckoned each of us to recognize our mental abilities as well as those of leadership and service.

Composing constitution to govern proficient officers manage varied

After many weeks of planning and writing a constitution, the steering committee, composed of delegates from Griffith and Gray high schools, was ready for the Student Council to swing into action. At the completion of a rousing campaign, students elected representatives from their homerooms and officers to lead them. In a stately ceremony, December 9, the officers, executive and standing committee chairmen, and representatives took their oaths of office. Candles were lit to signify the purpose for which the Student Council stands. Organized to provide opportunities for the development of student leadership and to promote the general welfare of the school, the council was sponsored by Mrs. Pattie Smothers.

high school life, Student Council, challenging activities of Parkland.

Creating excitement and sparking school spirit among students, the council sponsored Harvest Week, October 11-16. Along with games and entertainment, the week included the crowning of the Harvest Queen and a dance in honor of her. Striving to help needy persons in the community, Student Council members sponsored a food drive at Thanksgiving. With the same idea in mind, they eagerly delved into the task of gathering clothes for unfortunate Cuban refugees. Serving as a supporter of student functions, the organization sponsored gala dances and proms and formed an Interclub Council. Another highlight of the year was the attendance of several members at the North Carolina District Student Council Congress.

Corresponding secretary Peggy White deposits Christmas cards into the teachers' boxes. Her office also requires that she serve as co-chairman of the publicity committee.

Giving extra time to meeting and planning, the steering committee began building a strong foundation for the Parkland Student Council. When the constitution was complete, the members who had worked many hours in room 403 were surprised by a well-deserved party. To form the Student Council, the committee supervised the election of homeroom representatives. Working to serve and to promote school spirit, the members sold decals during lunch and programs at games. Assisted by Mrs. Pattie Smothers, the steering committee fulfilled its purpose of serving the student body.

Working vigorously at their task, members of the annual staff met the February 25 deadline with smiling faces. From the beginning of the new school year, co-editors and staff toiled busily in room 209 over layouts, copy, and pictures, striving to make Parkland's first yearbook the best. After many tedious hours of hard work, the proud journalists were rewarded in May as they distributed the '66 Spectatus to approving students.

Journalistic abilities enable pupils to publish interesting, factual paper.

Striving to build a firm foundation, the Parkland Times staffers diligently worked at writing and revising news stories and features. The frenzy of last minute rushing and counting of heads was soon forgotten when the successful October 8th edition received proud compliments from the student body. Along with mastering the techniques of journalistic style, pupils experienced fun and fellowship interwoven throughout the class.

Parkland Times co-editors, David Fishel and Gaffney Fainter, plan layouts to achieve an attractive and interesting appearance for a future publication. Checking story deadlines and counting heads are also a portion of their duties.

N.H.S. scholars establish example of character, leadership, service.

Quietness filled the gymnasium as old National Honor Society members tapped inductees. The solemn ceremony reminded the student body of the high qualifications necessary to be inducted into the selective chapter. They include character, scholarship, leadership, and service. Inductees must have and maintain a 3.4 scholastic average. Sponsored by Miss Daisy Lee Glasgow, the society ushered at all assemblies and pep rallies. During the spring delegates were elected to attend the National Honor Society convention held from April 17-19 in Asheville, North Carolina.

Honor societies recognize students with journalistic, speaking talents.

Honoring outstanding journalists, Quill and Scroll conducted inductions in March. Students merited membership by a high scholastic average and certain amount of printed material. To publish a literary magazine was the goal of members. A pupil's excellence in oratory and drama qualified him for Masque and Gavel. By obtaining high academic grades and participating in state festivals, members reflected their worthiness.

By working in concession stands, Anchor Club girls serve school.

Active Anchors climaxed a busy year by dining at North with other county Anchors and their civic sponsor, the Pilot Club. Under the leadership of faculty advisor, Mrs. Kathryn Edwards, the Anchor Club reported an impressive service record including such projects as helping the teachers, stuffing stockings for retarded children, collecting for the March of Dimes, and operating the concession stand at basketball games. The club held two inductions, tapping girls posessing qualities of service, leadership, and citizenship.

Anchor Club committee chairmen, Barbara Foltz and Janet Masencup, serve refreshments at the concession stand in the cafeteria during basketball season. This is one of many service projects performed for the school by Anchor girls.

Anchor Club officers, Linda Hines, vice-president; Irene Banks, president; and Judy Widener, treasurer, eagerly anticipate an upcoming induction by preparing paper anchors for new members of Parkland's honorary girls' service club.

Key Club members, Tim Bynum and Steve Walters, stuff a Goodwill Bundle Day bag with articles of clothing and other household necessities supplied by members of the student body.

Key Club provides community aid as group gathers Goodwill articles.

Gathering clothing and furniture, the Key Club strove to reach its goal in the Goodwill Bundle Drive. Under the sponsorship of the Winston-Salem Kiwanis Club, this is an honorary organization for boys. The Key Club served students and community by keeping the school grounds clean and by collecting for the March of Dimes. Advised by Mr. Jack Kirstein, the Key Club set the precedent for coming years with its motto, "We Build".

Planning a schedule to follow during their March of Dimes drive are Key Club officers, Dick Callaway, pres.; Ronnie Weaver, sec.; Tim Bynum, treas.; and Lee Callaway, vicepres.

Arranging props for play, acting, students earn Thespian induction.

Tension prevailed December 16 in the back-stage dressing rooms. Hustling to and fro, the Thespians and other drama students were preparing for their presentation of three one-act plays. This production was directed by Miss Selvey Johnson, sponsor of the industrious organization, and several Thespians. Highlighting the spring was the musical, "Oklahoma", in which the dramatists participated along with the chorus department. Each member of the Thespians was inducted because of outstanding work in acting and stage managing.

Home-made wigs for their play delight Thespian officers, Llana Harley, president; Kathleen Terry, treasurer; Diane Mc-Knight, vice-president; and Glenda Thompson, secretary.

Inserting a light bulb in the place of one which has burned out, Kaye Carmichael and Bill Fletcher, Thespian members, help to arrange the stage setting for a play production.

First row: K. Carmichael, B. Coleman, A. Morris. Last row: J. Carmichael, B. Ernst, B. Hilton, B. Fletcher.

Practicing a scene from the one-act play, "Don't Feed the Animals", Rita Harvey, Pat Foy, and Alice Morris ridicule Gene Shields, the only man on earth. Bill Fletcher, Gene's butler, observes the action.

Anxiously anticipating their premiere, Dramateers applied final touches to their make-up and rehearsed difficult lines. Three one-act plays, "The Boor," "Antic Spring", and "Don't Feed the Animals", were presented on December 16. During the second semester the students produced "You Can't Take it With You" and "Oklahoma". Directed by Miss Selvey Johnson, Dramateers had an interesting year becoming familiar with the uses of make-up, lighting, and properties. In the spring the dramatists attended a performance presented at U.N.C. by the Carolina Playmakers.

Portraying characters from "The Boor", Llana Harley, threatens Barry Ernest with a gun. All the excitement is too much for the weak heart of Terry Rothrock, the old butler.

By planning musical, "Oklahoma", Dramateers gain acting knowledge.

"You've got that ball, you've got that ball, you've got that ball, now go!" yelled many members of the Pep Club. This club, composed of sophomores, juniors, and seniors, helped the cheerleaders lead their school in spirited yells and lively chants. The purpose of the organization was to promote school spirit and secure the loyalty and cooperation of the students. Mrs. Carolyn Orrell and Mrs. Pat Reed, sponsors, directed six committees—badge, poster, card, contest, pep rally, and publicity. Committee duties included the announcement of games by means of posters, badges, and the intercom. Attendance at a football, basketball, or baseball game climaxed the club's week of work.

Heading school membership drive, Red Cross Club collects donations.

Encouraging interest in the welfare of others, newly elected Red Cross representatives solicited contributions in their homerooms during National Red Cross Week in October. As busy members created bulletin boards, the homerooms strove to achieve 100 per cent in their collections. Students could, in addition, pledge their services. Sponsored by Miss Peggy Parrish, students collected food and household articles to give to needy families during the Christmas holidays. Toys and clothing, as well as bags of coal, were offered to make Christmas happier for the less fortunate.

Library, office pages, bus drivers offer services to officials, students.

As a help to the faculty and pupils, Parkland students undertook a job of service. These students, willing to work, became either an office page, library page or bus driver. Running errands day after day seemed an endless responsibility for the pages of the office and library. Each morning and each afternoon, trusted bus drivers with twelve buses undertook the duty of being safe and on time with their passengers.

Girls acquire sportsmanship attitude while earning points for monograms.

Operating under a state-wide constitution, the G.A.A. participated in intramural and interscholastic activities. Organization of the club was based on a point system. Each girl needed 25 membership points. Eligible girls were notified by letter and a party was given for the new members. The girls participated in the Reynolds Playday in March and the state-wide G.A.A. Playday in May. Under the direction of Miss Norma Freeman, sponsor, and Mrs. Hazel Phillips, associate sponsor, the girls acquired the ability to work together and gained a sense of good sportsmanship.

Art Club members view painting to deepen knowledge in aesthetics.

Studying and analyzing paintings of famous artists, Art Club members visited Old Salem and the Gallery of Fine Arts early in the year. To promote interest in art, members exhibited original creative work. Seeking new ways to express their thoughts and ideas, the Art Club, sponsored by Miss Bobbie Linville, met every two weeks. Art work was auctioned by the club to raise funds for various activities. Speakers for the meetings included Mr. Antony Swider, head of the art department in Winston-Salem, and Mr. J. A. Woodward, who was principal of Gray High School last year.

By attending classes at Reynolds, I.C.T. boys obtain industrial training.

Because of their interest in trade and industrial education, I.C.T. students came together in the fall to form their chapter of the Vocational Industrial Clubs of America. Meeting every six weeks, members developed leadership through their participation in a food drive for needy families during the fall. To exchange ideas and discuss common purposes, members attended the Western District Conference of the V.I.C.A. in November at Burlington. Social activities such as group luncheons and gatherings for the making of activity booklets also helped to unite participants.

D.E. Club provides better relationship between school, business society.

In observance of National D.E.C.A. Week, the Distributive Education Club of Parkland sponsored several service projects. Acquiring license plates and attaching them to the teachers' cars was one helpful duty accomplished by the club's 32 members. At Christmas time, the students took food, clothing, and furniture to a needy family. February proved to be an exciting month with the annual competition for the best salesman. To honor a worthy boy or girl, the district chose a Student-of-the-Year. Climaxing the term was a Bosses' Banquet for the D.E. students and their employers.

F.T.A. encourages Parkland pupils to enter profession of education.

Anticipating a year in which to gain experience in the teaching profession, F.T.A. members met and elected officers in October. In an effort to show their appreciation, the industrious group prepared seasonal favors for each faculty member at Thanksgiving and Christmas. The informal meetings of the club included discussion on such topics as the range of opportunities in a teaching career and the role educators play in a democracy. Directed by Miss Helen Bickley, the club sponsored Student-Teacher Day, which gave many members an opportunity to assume the duties of instructors.

Future homemakers solve problems of family meals, clothing expenses.

"1-2-3-4" puffed the Future Homemakers of America, January 10, at their meeting focused on body exercises. Moving to and fro, the girls learned many methods for reducing. Attending another meeting, February 14, the girls learned facial techniques and the application of make-up. Under the direction of Mrs. Geraldine Osborne and Mrs. Francis Bruce, sponsors, they produced in April a fashion show, modeling their original outfits and served as hostesses at several school-sponsored activities. To complete the year, the F.H.A. attended a mother-daughter banquet in May.

Maintaining Christian leadership, Hi-Y Club builds better citizens.

Bruce Hinson, Hi-Y participant, records the score of a previous game with Reynolds Hi-Y basketball team. The club sponsored two teams, Senior and Junior, and held an equal season.

Striving to create, maintain and extend Christian leadership among high school boys, the Hi-Y was an intricate part of school activities. Supported by the YMCA and sponsored by Mr. Carl Motsinger, the Hi-Y, an active service club, painted the school dumpster, supplied the campus bulletin board with school news, and collected for the March of Dimes. Also, during the winter months, members enjoyed participating in the Hi-Y basketball league.

Commenting on some previous basketball victories are Hi-Y officers, Ronald Weaver, vice-president; Mike Vogler, treasurer; David Joyner, president and Tommy Thompson, secretary.

Studying events, names in Bible, Y.F.C. club prepares for quizzes.

As their first service project of the year, Campus Life Club members busily washed cars at a local service station on November 27. With about fifty Parkland students actively participating, the group sponsored a judo demonstration after the car wash, a "Grand Ole Auction" in the spring, and a drive to swell subscriptions to the club's magazine. Bible quiz teams composed of club members competed at regular meetings.

"Mm-m-m good!" was the prevailing comment at the Y-Teen bake sale held in February at King's, Clark's and the Parkway Plaza Shopping Center. Cookies, cakes and pastries were some of the tidbits baked by the girls. Highlighting the year, the Y-Teens enjoyed a pajama party held at the Y.W.C.A. Under the direction of Mrs. Jane Higgin-botham, the Y-Teens conducted a car wash to increase their treasury. Membership cards were distributed to active participants of the club. To conclude a successful year, the Y-Teens attended a banquet honoring the high school principals.

Seniors excel in class leadership, major athletics during school year.

Seniors outstanding in leadership and athletics became members of the senior board and Monogram Club to exert their abilities. Consisting of two elected representatives from each homeroom, the senior board undertook matters dealing with graduation, social events and other class activities. Mrs. Virginia Mickey served as the committee's advisor. Senior athletes earning a letter in varsity competition were eligible for membership in the Boys' Monogram Club, sponsored by Mr. Homer Thompson. Members were entitled to wear the "Mustang" jacket, denoting honorary athletic achievements.

Trying to understand Roman culture, Latin Clubbers enjoy spring banquet.

Singing songs in Latin, playing bingo the Roman way, and dressing in the traditional Roman manner highlighted the festivities of the Latin Club banquet held in the spring. Celebrators soon made this "dead" language come alive by eating in the ancient Roman style. With a recreational program, the club enjoyed playing games and presenting skits based on Roman mythology and literature at monthly meetings. Composed of interested second year students under the direction of Mrs. Eloise Curlee, the club strove to understand the religion, culture, and people of the Roman times.

Seeking a better understanding of the Spanish language, Spanish Club members met in November to organize their constitution and elect officers. Spanish exchange student, Maria Camargo, spoke at a meeting in December about Christmas customs in her native country, Bucaramanga, Colombia. Club members also enjoyed singing Christmas carols, after which they feasted on a typical Latin American meal. In January a Spanish play, "So This Is Mexico", was presented. Sponsored by Mrs. Bertha Fernandez, the club held meetings once a month featuring programs corresponding with the season.

French Club builds understanding, appreciation of customs, language.

Hearing the familiar Christmas story read in French inspired members of the French Club. To add to festivities for the December meeting, they played games and sang songs in imitation of French customs. Refreshments were derived from famous French recipes. The first meeting was held at Parkland, November 15. Composed of second and third year students, the club is sponsored by Mrs. Carrie May Allgood. Programs at various students' homes were planned for each month. Purpose of the French Club is to promote an interest in the French language, people, and their customs.

Die Deutsche Gesellschaftliche Verbindungs Verein was the title chosen by the German Club during the first meeting. Electing officers and writing a constitution occupied the first weeks. Under direction of sponsor, Mrs. Eloise Curlee, the club planned Advent services to highlight the months before Christmas. At Christmas the members sang German carols. Exchanging green eggs at Easter acquainted the club with a quaint German custom. Flags of German-speaking lands were installed in the classroom as another attempt to encourage familiarity with the German customs.

Melodious tunes fill chorus room as varsity choir members practice songs for T.V., local performers.

Bright smiles and harmonious voices combined to form Parkland's varsity chorus. Under the direction of Miss Jane Dull, chorus teacher, choir members, attired in evening dresses and suits, performed for churches and various other groups. Dressed in red robes and stocking caps, varsity singers appeared several times on a local television station during the Christmas season and caroled at a shopping center. The weeks following Christmas brought a "Broadway Revue" and spring was warmly welcomed with the chorus' own interpretation of "Oklahoma". Melodious tunes filled the chorus room as members practiced favorites and learned new numbers in hopes of building stronger voices and even better choral programs.

Cheerleaders, majorettes boost spirit

To build a warm and friendly relationship with rival schools proves to be the goal of Sharon Ervin, chief, and Joyce Helms, co-chief. Showing their agility, they demonstrate a special welcome cheer and flash a cordial smile to visiting athletic opponents.

Working to improve their techniques, Parkland High cheerleaders broke the silence around Griffith during summer practices. A week at camp in August put the girls in shape for the first pep rally and game. Hours of tedious work were spent before each game making posters and badges. Boosting school spirit and team morale, the squad artistically decorated the goal posts with red, white, and blue streamers. Anticipation mounted when the girls switched to basketball chants. Under the supervision of Mrs. Patricia Reed and Mrs. Carolyn Orrell, the group spiced up their yells with acrobatic stunts such as splits and cartwheels.

Using their white flags, majorettes Debbie Sheets, Sharon Campbell, and Dianne McKnight march in preparation for future school half-time and pep rally perfomances.

Colorfully attired in new uniforms, the majorettes pranced their way through a parade and half-time show at Wake Forest Band Day on October 2. Long practices after school and at night went into the preparation for halftime exhibitions during football season. Twirling of fire batons and flags spiced their appearances with variety. To promote school spirit. the girls donned red skirts and white sweaters with a red and blue 'P' on the front during the days of the games. The squad marched in the Christmas Parade on November 27. In April the girls performed with the band in the Cherry Blossom Festival in Washington D. C. for four exciting days.

By spending many hours practicing, band performs intricate routines.

Keeping time to the seasonal music, the Parkland High band marched briskly along in the Winston-Salem Christmas Parade. Spectators anxiously awaited the halftime performances by the group at football games. An inspired audience listened to the December 19 concert given by the band and and conducted by Mr. Robert Clark. Off and on during the school year, this talented group of students entertained at various assembly programs. Donned in colorful red, white, and blue uniforms and carrying their shiny instruments, the marching Mustangs played their part in building school spirit.

ATHLETICS

Sports played a vital role in our student life, both as a prescribed course and as an extra-curricular activity. Sophomores and juniors were introduced to the basic skills in physical education classes, where good sportsmanship was taught and practiced. Intramural and varsity sports aided us in learning to function as team members. Although we did not always win, a spirit of victory prevailed through our determination to do our best. In our pursuit of physical development we were able to discover and display our athletic talents. Whether as active participants or as ardent supporters, we were unified by the mutual desire to encourage physical fitness and build friendly relationships with rival schools.

Enthusiasm, strenuous exercising strengthen 1965 speedball season.

Kicking swiftly and punting vigorously, the girls' speedball team began its first season at Parkland with a determination to win. Approximately fourteen girls contributed hours after school concentrating on practicing techniques, perfecting skills, and building confidence. Under the leadership of Toni Manning, captain, and Mrs. Hazel Phillips and Miss Norma Freeman, coaches, the team concluded the season with a victory over the Vikings. The girls played Reynolds once, and North and West twice. October 28 ended the girls' speedball season with one win and four losses.

Joining recreation with exercise, softball team strives for victory.

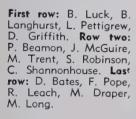

Joining forces on the softball team were experienced players from Gray and Griffith plus new recruits. Coached by Mrs. Hazel Phillips, the girls strove to form a well-proportioned team. Last year, Gray's softball squad had a 2-3 record while Griffith's team finished with a 3-5 record.

Through hustling and stretching, Kathy Shannonhouse, sophomore, illustrates how to scoop the ball for an easy out.

With the approaching winter season, thoughts of sports-minded girls turned to basketball. Learning the "shuffle", the "weave", and other plays prepared the girls for their first game against North Davidson. After Christmas holidays the junior varsity and varsity teams swung into an active schedule against other schools. North, East, West, and Reynolds were among those supplying the interscholastic competition.

Vigorously practicing set ups and serves, energetic girls anticipated the annual spring Volleyball Play Day at Reynolds' gym. At Play Day the team participated in round robin tournaments with other county schools. Coached by Mrs. Hazel Phillips, Parkland's first team was comprised of girls with past experience and a keen interest in the sport. New equipment and bright uniforms helped get the team off to a rousing start.

While practicing for severe 4-A competition, Connie Brooks, junior, exhibits her excellence in the skill of serving.

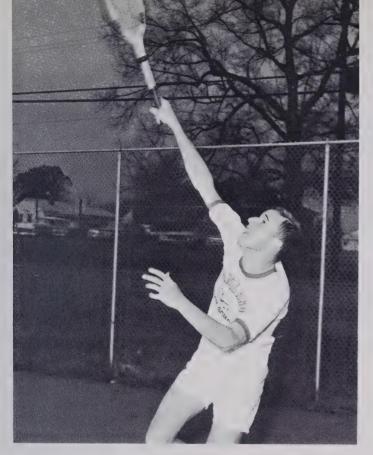

Practicing to perfect her back-hand swing, Nancy Turlington, member of the tennis team, anticipates an upcoming match.

Strenuous gymnastics and brisk musical drills comprised only a part of the Girl's tennis team's three-week conditioning program. Tennis coach, Miss Norma Freeman, followed the weeks of conditioning with basic tennis fundamentals, combining fitness with skill to form a well rounded team.

In order to get in shape for an oncoming tennis match Joe Landreth energetically practices after school with his teammates on the tennis courts at Hill Junior High School.

Anticipating a victory, Ronnie Booe, tennis team member, prepares to score another point as he returns this serve.

Coach Homer Thompson had the job of building a tennis team from veterans of Gray and untrained boys from Griffith who were eager to play. After stiff 4-A competition the team realized that whether each match ended in victory or defeat, it gained much valued experience for the future.

Boys' tennis team participants gain valued training in 4-A competition.

"Success" was the byword of the Mustang gridders last fall. Not only did they possess a winning record, but several individuals starred also. Three Parkland players were selected for the All-Conference team. Don Hamby, Gene Shields and Dan Zimmerman, were all three "Mr. Mustang" several times and Zimmerman was a unanimous choice for All City-County. The Mustangs came within seven points of a trip to the State 4-A finals in 1965. Undoubtedly the best game the Mustangs played was the contest in which they defeated the Lexington Yellowjackets 14-7. Many professional sportswriters have termed this the major upset in the 4-A conference. The team jumped to an early lead on a 26-yard pass play from Don Hamby to Steve Butner. The Yellowjackets came roaring back in the second quarter when Chris Ripple, the Lexington quarterback, galloped three yards to tie the score at 7-7. However, in the third quarter, Hamby engineered another TD by connecting once more with Butner on a pass pattern. The Mustangs gained nearly a mile and a third total offense. The opponents' total offense was only 15 yards more than the Mustangs rushing yardage.

Coach Muse shows his players the type of defense they should play to put a blanket on the driving Burlington offense.

Anticipating the season opener on December 3, the Mustangs began practice in early November. After many hours of working out under the instruction of Coach Tom Muse and Mr. Daniel Smothers, assistant coach, the Mustangs were prepared to stampede the Black Knights. Parkland defeated North Davidson, 52-48, and a week later, East Forsyth, 53-50. However, against Surry Central Mustang defense loosened up and the Eagles poured in 65 points for a 65-53 triumph. Suffering from the loss of several valuable players, Parkland Mustangs were "corraled" in the coming weeks by other conference foes. Even though the season was not as fruitful as some had hoped, the team gained experience and a sense of sportsmanship.

Carpet-like greens and warm, spring afternoons provided ideal conditions for Gray and Griffith golf matches. Teeing off in 4-A play, the teams, coached by Mr. Homer Thompson and Mr. Grant Queen, played eligible school teams on approved courses. Members collected various low scores during conference play. Besides playing in 4-A matches, participants practiced individually to assure success in tournament play.

Performing in junior varsity sports, sophomores enjoy school activities.

To offer the sophomore students a chance to participate in more extra-curricular activities, Parkland sponsored junior varsity events. Boys readily took part in sports such as football, basketball, and baseball to train them for later varsity athletics. Tenth-grade girls became cheerleaders to arouse an interest in the younger team.

School obtains reputation of fair play as pupils participate in 4-A games.

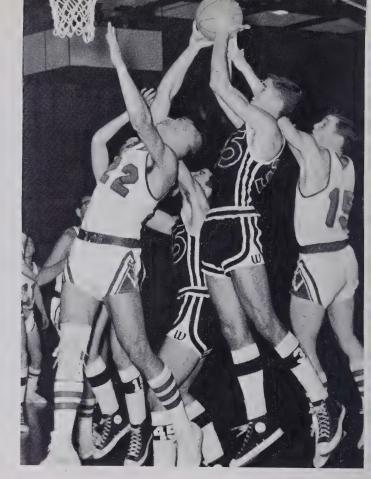

Enduring long hours of tedious practice and facing keen sports competition, Mustang athletes gained playing experience and developed good sportsmanship by encountering both victory and defeat. Whether as a Mustang hustler on the gridiron or as an active wrestler or basketball player, sports enthusiasts found a recreational outlet by participating in Parkland's well-rounded athletic program. For physical exercise, some enjoyed such activities as bowling. Through strenuous drills, cheerleaders, Dixie Debs and majorettes perfected their coordination in performing spirited routines.

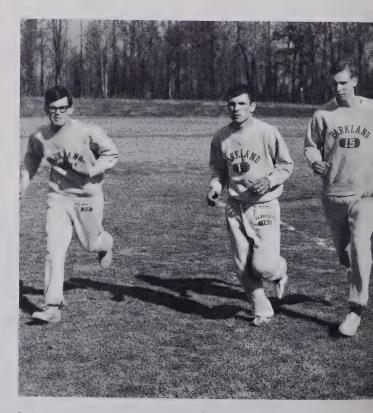

During a Western style pep rally, the cheerleaders vividly demonstrate why they are so vital to our athletic teams.

Taking a short break during a tiring mid-afternoon practice, Deb Jean Lindsay adjusts Jean Little's dancing boots.

Senior varsity basketball player, Don Hamby, forward, blocks a field goal attempt by a determined Burlington player, as Steve Mock, forward, adds his helping hand.

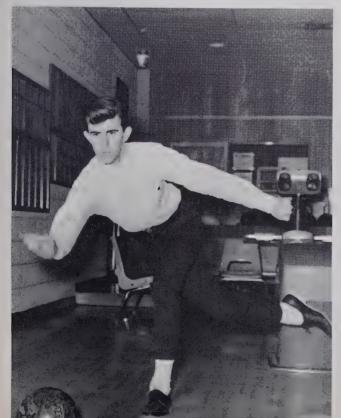

Parkland runners Mike Daniels, Johnny McGee, and Johnny Flowers execute the old proverb "practice makes perfect" as they prepare themselves for future cross-country races by continuous exercising and running each day after school.

Senior Faye Pope, a co-captain of the girls' basketball team, shoots foul shots during afternoon practice.

After pulling Gary Lewis, tailback, out of the line up in the game against North, Coach Homer Thompson gives him some offensive strategy to take back to the Mustang huddle.

Jumping rope, a vital part of daily exercise needed to keep varsity wrestlers in shape, developed strong leg muscles and breath control.

"In vain we build the world, unless the builder also grows."

-Edwin Markham

With the tools of curiosity, inspiration and ability, we entered school late in August prepared to build an incomparable reputation for the Mustangs. Before our very eyes we witnessed a school built from careful thought and many hours of labor, not only by construction workers, but by teachers and students who endeavored to make Parkland live up to the expectations of the community. Realizing that for some of us our high school years were ending and for others they were only beginning, be sought to make our first year at Parkland one full of rewarding experiences.

Our days were spent behind books learning that  $c^2=a^2+b^2$ , repeating "Parlez-vous francais?", building a table, baking a cake, memorizing lines from Macbeth, and trying to understand the world. As we look back we remember exams and homework, club meetings, ballgames, class dances, and friends. No matter whether we conquered a major crisis in our lives or encountered everyday occurrences, we acquired a better understanding of life and ourselves. We learned not only that one plus one equals two, but that the time to build and shape our lives for tomorrow is today.
